Summary of the content:	Students shall learn how policy concepts are developed, translated into politics and actually implemented in two major policy areas of the European Union, social cohesion and sustainable development (socio-ecological transformation). They shall learn to recognize and reflect the difference between scientifically based knowledge in these fields, the formulation of policy goals, the development and implementation of politics and their outcomes, as they are shaped by the institutional framework of the European Union. Students thereby shall be enabled to identify and understand institutional opportunities and constraints in the relationship between the EU and its member states, political options, shortcomings, social inequalities and conflicts. Furthermore, they will be enabled to develop a deeper understanding of collective action opportunities in selected areas in the process of socio-ecological transformation.
