Summary of the content⁴:	The course covers key microeconomics issues, with a view to providing an integrated overview of microeconomics from both the theoretical and policy perspectives. One of the key objectives of the course is to introduce the microeconomic concepts from a variety of approaches, across a variety of heterodox and mainstream views, as well as to link the theoretical perspectives with different methodologies and analytical traditions. Another key objective is to situate microeconomics within the context of the history of economic thought as well as in the context of the debates and divisions between micro- and macroeconomics. The first set of lectures will focus on microeconomic theories through an examination of the literature on the role of information, theory of the firm and small and medium sized enterprises, global commodity and value chain analysis, as well as exploring the theoretical underpinnings of industrialisation and the role of manufacturing. The second set of lectures look at the theory - policy nexus from both the perspectives of industrial policy, competition, resource-based industrialisation, trade,
